Comic Miseries.

BY JOHN G. SAXE.

Don't think yourself " a happy dog."

Sets all the room a-blaze.

For all your merry ways.

Be stupid if you can,-

It's such a very serious thing

You're at an evening party, with

A group of pleasant folks-

You venture quietly to crack

The least of little jokes.

A lady " does n't catch it onite."

And asks you to explain ;

And takes it up again !

To edify a clergyman

Alas! for one who drops a jest,

You're talking deep philosophy,

Who's foul of grave discourse

And begs you'll tell that fanny thing

You lose your love, or loaves, and fall A prey to melancholy; While every body marvels that

With a very special force,

A friend across the way,

You said the other day !

By sudden change in politics,

Or sadder change in Polly.

Your mirth is under ban-They think your very grief "a joke,"

You're such a funny man!

You follow up a stylish card,

(To pay for musty wine a)

My lady bounces in,

That bids you come and dine,

You're looking very dismal, when

And why you don't "begin !"

Who likes to give you credit for

The elever thing he hears .-

Just knocking off the point of it, And leaving out the pun!

And so he hawks your joke about,

You're telling to a knot of friends

That cloud your matrimonial sky, And banish all repose-

And tells the town the pleasant news :-
